

The Future

Around the turn of each century, the world as we know it has ceased to exist. Each time a new harnessed energy was brought forward that eventually changed the life forces of humanity. Last century electricity, which was always there, was harnessed to be used in a thousand-fold ways in the succeeding hundred years. If a person from the 1850s were to appear in the 1950s, common household appliances would appear to be the work of master magicians. If a person from the 1950s were to look at the current computer technologies, it would also appear that master magicians were at work.

At this time, the energy that will be harnessed and brought to fruition in the next hundred years is not apparent to most people. I would like to challenge your paradigm with this option: by the year 2100, 92% of the population will be able to teleport at will. Let's get to the basics of this option. There exists certain states of consciousness or levels of vibrations that I prefer to call "dimensions." In each dimension, a physical plane law ceases to exist. In some dimensions, new laws make the impossible possible. Contained in the 144 dimensions are the acts of levitation, invisibility, walking on water, and teleportation.

These dimensions, much like electricity, have always existed. The ability to harness the dimensions and the consciousness to use the dimensions for the highest good of all concerned happens when the group consciousness of mankind has reached a specific state of receptivity.

The dimensions are "caught" teachings, not "taught" teachings. They are passed down through a lineage of living teachers. What this means is that they must be learned in the presence of a person who has learned them in the presence of a person who has learned them in the presence of a person, etc., etc., etc. There are no books that tell you how to access the dimensions. Each person must be shown.

Several of the steps that lead up to teleportation are invisibility, levitation, and walking on water. I would like to discuss invisibility in greater depth. Invisibility is in a dimension that bends and manipulates light to create an illusion that you are not physically present. You cannot be seen. People see what is directly behind you versus seeing light reflected off you. (You cannot walk through walls or people. You can still bump your toe, hurt yourself, and need to open the door to get out of the room.)

Invisibility is taught in stages. In the first stage, the student makes their little finger disappear and sees parts of the teacher disappear. In the second stage, the student sees and makes their hand, wrist, and forearm disappear for a fraction of a second, and also sees more parts of the teacher disappear. The third stage is when the student makes their whole arm below the shoulder disappear and holds it for several seconds, and experiences the teacher becoming invisible for 30 seconds to one minute. Once a student has learned to make everything up to the shoulder disappear, total invisibility is one small step away.

As the mind's capacity to use recursive infraction of light expands, mankind is only a few short steps away from teleportation.

In the beginning, as you watch your little finger appear and disappear in the blink of an eye, more energy is consumed in changing your belief system than is used to actually make your finger disappear. In the middle, the mind drags out any possibility that opposes invisibility, rather than destroy a belief system you've had all your life. At the end, as you watch your teacher disappear for several minutes and see the eyes of your fellow students as you disappear, you wonder how something this easy seemed so impossible for so long.

The teachings of levitation create the third of seven dynamics needed to be able to teleport. This and the "walk on water" (second of seven) show the body the how to deal with the effects of gravity. The rest of the seven are also all "caught" teachings.

The breakdown of conscious beliefs (like the world is flat) in a physical plane reality, where group consciousness has a consensus belief, has large amounts of resistance. I recall seeing an article from a NY newspaper from the early 1900s where 100,000 people marched the streets of Manhattan calling electricity the work of the devil. Fear and lack of understanding create a vortex where the new and the unknown are judged and dismissed.
